most states offer other types of driver licenses to people who are unable to drive. these licenses are typically called “medical licenses”. these medical licenses are only valid in the state where they are issued, and typically offer less privileges and features. tennessee offers six types of special driving licenses: service - this license is issued to people whose medical conditions make driving dangerous or impractical. interstate driver license - this license is issued to people who are required to travel as an employee of a private carrier. rollover - this license is issued to people with a high risk of a catastrophic accident from rollover crashes. emergency - this license is issued to people who need to drive to a hospital emergency room. dangerous/warning - this license is issued to people who are impaired from drugs or alcohol. these people must not drive. dangerous/warning-dom - this license is issued to people who are impaired from drugs or alcohol, and must not drive. a driver license can be revoked due to the following reasons: driving under the influence, excessive speed, speeding citation, failure to pay on time, seat belt violation, and accidents related to driving. revoking a license is a serious action because it can make it more difficult to get a job, housing, and/or go on public assistance. when applying for a license renewal, applicants must be truthful in answering any questions. if the applicant is found to be ineligible due to falsifying answers, the applicant’s license may be revoked.
